Pica for the Traction Engine.

The inception of this traction engine on the common highways of the country, it am aware, must be gradual, it least until a confidence in them has been established. Like all established builts, especially one which antedates all known history of the use, like the drag system by some kind of an animal, that confidence, can be greatly facilitated by the introduction of it (the traction motor). The writer has had the experience in this employment of work with an eight hereo power machine in Plymouth and Bristol, counties in Massachusetts. The power of this mechine was generated on the machine by steam, and not withstanding the roads were sandy and boxy, sone, 200 miles were traveled in going from farm, to farm, plowing, threshing grain and sawing wood, etc., and, this without accident.
